A Message From General Johnson

Americans are a peace-loving people. Throughout our history we have maintained a relatively small Military Establishment. Traditionally we have depended on the country's Reserve Forces to augment the military in times of national emergency.

So it was in World Wars I and II. So it is today. No small part of this task is borne by our Air Force Reserve. As an important segment of our national way of life, the Air Force Reserve merits the support of the American public.

Currently engaged in a broad expansion program, the Air Force Reserve provides both flying and ground training in many highly specialized fields. In addition it is engrossed in plans for the replacement of many of its units called to active duty since outbreak of the Korean conflict.

Progressively becoming more and more a vital arm of our expanding Air Force, the Air Reserve is gradually unfolding a newly organized Long Range Program—offering patriotic citizens all sorts of opportunities for training, pay, promotion, and retirement benefits.

The Air Reserve Program offers opportunities well worth learning about. This booklet will tell you about them and our modern citizen soldiers. Read it—and join this growing, patriotic band working for the highest of ideals—toward establishment of a free world.

LEON W. JOHNSON,
Lieutenant General, USAF
Commanding, Continental Air Command

Why You Should Be a Member of the Air Force Reserve

Service to Country

Since 1776, our Nation has depended upon the civilian soldier. In every national emergency, reserves have helped reduce the time needed for mobilization. You can fill that important need today as a member of the Air Force Reserve.

Education

Active Air Force Reservists will be eligible to attend regular Air Force specialist schools, to learn new trades and skills that can be applied to military as well as civilian life. You may take advantage of this OPPORTUNITY, or take Air Force extension school courses in your spare time. This training will be of mutual advantage to you and your country.

Recognition

As an Air Force Reservist, you will enjoy added RECOGNITION in your community. In the company of the leaders of the community you will widen civilian and military contacts.

Leadership

Leaders are admired and find advancement in life much easier. In the Air Force Reserve, your leadership qualities will find expression in many respects. You will have unusual opportunities to supervise and instruct . . . added good qualifications for any successful man.

Friendship

You'll enjoy good times in the Air Force Reserve as you meet old buddies, make new friends, and enlarge your acquaintanceship among air-minded associates.

Retirement

Active 20-year members of the Air Force Reserve are entitled to retirement benefits, when 60 years old. A few years from now you'll be glad you met the necessary obligations that will pay cash dividends in later life.

Your Investment

If you have had prior honorable military service in the Armed Forces, you are eligible for membership in the Air Force Reserve. Why not take advantage of that prior service by continuing your military training? Your active military service makes a nice down payment on your investment for the future.

In the "Reserve Wing" column are shown the new unit designations and, in parentheses, the old numbers.

Composition of the Air Reserve

The Reserve Forces of the Air Force consist of the Air National Guard of the United States and the Air Force Reserve, and are composed of all personnel commissioned, appointed, enlisted, or assigned therein.

Reservists are divided into the Ready Reserve, the Standby Reserve and the Retired Reserve.

Some members of the Reserve Forces are paid for certain training activities. Others train without pay, for credits or points toward promotion, retirement, and retention in the Reserve.

Your Status as an Air Force Reservist

In time of war or national emergency most physically able male American citizens in certain age groups are to some degree liable for military service.

As an Air Force Reservist you would, of course, expect to be called to active military service if your country needs you. As a reservist, however, you will have had the advantage of prior training and specialized instruction—qualifying you for important assignments and promotion.

Your chance of being called during any type of emergency depends upon whether you are in the Ready or Standby Reserve.

Here are the definitions:

Ready Reserve—The Ready Reserve consists of units and individuals available for prompt entry into active military service in any expansion of the active force in time of war, or in time of national emergency as declared by Congress or proclaimed by the President or as authorized by law.

Standby Reserve—The Standby Reserve consists of units and individuals available for involuntary employment in the expansion of the active force only in time of war or national emergency declared by Congress or as may be authorized by law.

Assignment and Retention in the Air Reserve

What are the main points about assignment in the two principal categories of the Reserve? Briefly, here is the situation.

All individuals, upon enlistment or appointment or upon transfer to the Air Force Reserve under any provision of law, will be assigned to the Ready Reserve and will remain there until they qualify for and elect Standby status. You can, if qualified, request transfer to the Standby Reserve at any time.

The criteria under which a reservist may qualify for Standby status are under study by the Department of Defense and, upon release, will be widely publicized.

Effective 9 July 1952, all Reserve appointments are for an indefinite term. Each officer who has a current appointment in the Air Force Reserve will be offered an indefinite appointment prior to 1 July 1953.

The Long Range Program

The Air Force Long-Range Reserve Program is now in operation throughout the country.

Announced in 1951, the program will be developed and expanded over a period of years and thus is referred to as the Long Range Program. Its purpose is to build a strong Air Reserve and to provide modern and efficient training for all Air Reservists.

The Long Range Program is comprehensive and as it develops will provide varied and diversified training programs. Some will require considerable time from the reservist for which he will be paid.

Other training programs require less time, are on a nonpay status, but enable the reservist to participate in regularly scheduled sessions and earn credit points.

Consult with the commanding officer of your nearest Air Reserve organization to determine the type of training available in your community.

This booklet gives you the current picture. It contains brief descriptions of the different training programs and comparative tables. Training opportunities are shown on the following pages.

Types of Training

The Long Range Program provides for a variety of training in flying, nonflying, and specialized fields. Consult the following tables to determine the main points of each category.

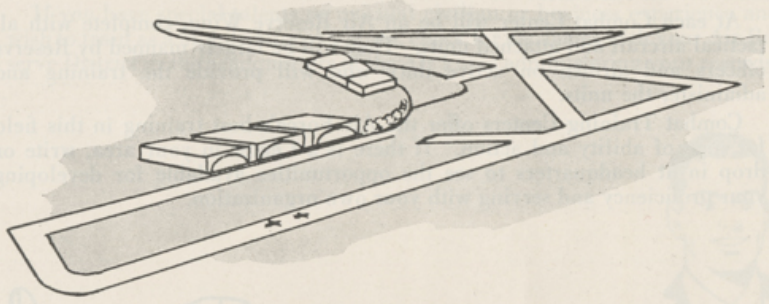
The following pages list additional information on the types of training listed in the preceding tables and explain the recently organized program of Contract Schools.



Air Force Reserve Flying Training Centers

Flying training is scheduled for reservists at six training centers located in or near our larger cities.

The Flying Training Centers will be manned principally by reservists on active duty with the Air Force, who will provide the training and administer the unit.

The units will receive training qualifying them to operate Pilot Training Schools with the Air Training Command if ordered into active military service.

If you are qualified as a flight instructor or administrator and want to add to your proficiency while preparing to train pilots for your Air Force, get in touch with the commanding officer of the nearest Air Force Reserve Flying Training Center.

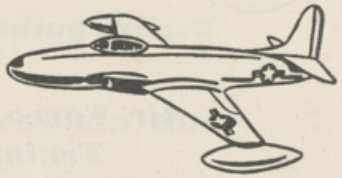
214079°—52——2

Air Force Reserve Combat Training Centers

Flying training is also scheduled at 24 Combat Training Centers located at Government owned or leased facilities. These Centers will train combat units for the Air Force.

At each Combat Center will be an Air Reserve Wing, complete with all tactical aircraft and attached units. They will be largely manned by Reserve officers and airmen on active duty who will provide the training and administer the units.

Combat Training Centers offer the Air Force's best training in this field for men of ability and action. If there is a Center in your area, write or drop in at headquarters to see the opportunities available for developing your proficiency and serving with your own organization.



Air Force Reserve Combat Support Centers

Like the Combat Training Centers, Support Centers will be located at Government owned or leased facilities, and will train non-flying combat support units for the Air Force.

Each Center will be largely manned by Reserve officers and airmen on active duty, who will provide the training and administer the unit.

If a Combat Support Center is located in your area you may find that this type of organization offers the best Air Force training available in this field of activity.

Mobilization Assignees

Mobilization Assignees are qualified Air Reservists who receive special individual training with a Regular Air Force unit. At Air Force installations where Mobilization Assignees are authorized, these men are so thoroughly indoctrinated in the functions of operation that they can readily assume vacated positions in time of emergency without time-consuming loss. Assignees are also trained "on-the-job" for other vacancies which exist in time of Air Force expansion or full mobilization. Mobilization Assignees are paid for training periods and, of course, earn promotion and retirement points.

If you have special talents or unusual civilian or business experience and wish to train as a Mobilization Assignee, check for vacancies with your Air Reserve District or the headquarters of the Air Force administering your records.

Mobilization Designees

Mobilization Designees are individuals whose highly specialized civilian qualifications make them especially valuable to the Air Force in the event they are called to active duty. In time of emergency or mobilization, these men are needed for specialized Air Force positions.

Mobilization Designees are not required to participate in duty training, but they may if they so desire. They do not receive duty training pay as do Mobilization Assignees, but are eligible to earn points toward promotion and retirement benefits. Fifteen day tours of active duty may be applied for annually by Mobilization Designees.

If you have the special qualifications for this type of reserve service, you will find it an excellent way to make your particular training and aptitudes available to your Air Force in the place where they will count the most in time of emergency.

Volunteer Air Reserve Training Units

VART units usually meet in convenient central locations in cities, eliminating the necessity of reservists driving considerable distances to Regular Air Force installations.

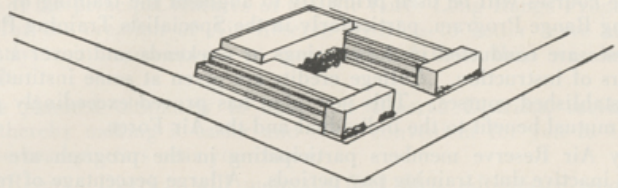
Meetings are usually held twice a month in two-hour sessions. Classroom type of instruction is provided with training films and guest speakers as special features.

Purpose of the VARTU Program is to enable reservists to keep up to date on Air Force developments and maintain their status in the Reserve as easily as possible.

Members of VART units, like all other reservists, have the opportunity of continuing their military specialty training through correspondence courses of the USAF Extension Course Institute.

If you have a relatively small amount of time available, but still wish to remain in good standing in the Reserve until you are assigned a permanent place in other categories of the Ready and Standby Reserve, etc., the VARTU provides an excellent method of accomplishing your goal.

VARTU members do not receive pay for attending sessions, but of course earn credit. Annual tours of 15 days' active duty may also be available.



Specialist Training Centers

Specialist Training Centers are designed to qualify Air Force Reservists who desire to develop specialized knowledge in any of a wide selection of Air Force career fields.

Specialist Training Center courses are planned for the major centers of population throughout the Nation.

Among many others, such highly technical specialties as aircraft engine maintenance, communications, air traffic control and warning, radar and radar maintenance will be offered. Ultimately, the Specialist Training Centers will cover most Air Force officer and airman career fields.

A number of Centers are now functioning under Continental Air Command's First, Tenth, and Fourteenth Air Forces and the commanders of the Third and Fourth Air Reserve Districts. Check and see if one is located near your home. If so you will find it worthwhile to investigate.

The locations of these centers are:

2285th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, New York, N. Y.
2360th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, San Francisco, Calif.
2400th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, Chicago, Ill.
2510th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, Birmingham, Ala.
2511th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, Fort Worth, Tex.
2286th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, Baltimore, Md.
2287th Air Force Reserve Specialist Training Center, Louisville, Ky.

Establishment of some forty-odd centers are planned for fiscal year 1953. Ultimately, the Air Reserve Long Range Program calls for organization of approximately 225 Specialist Training Centers making specialized training opportunities readily available to the majority of Air Reservists throughout the country.

Contract Schools

The Air Force has executed contracts with many leading schools and universities of the country to enable you as a reservist to improve your basic skills and make you more valuable to your employer as well as the Air Force.

These courses will be used primarily to augment the training of units of the Long Range Program, particularly in the Specialists Training Program.

Courses are conducted in the evenings or weekends and cover a total of 60 hours of instruction. College credits are given at some institutions for these established courses. This new plan has proved exceedingly popular and of mutual benefit to the individual and the Air Force.

Many Air Reserve members participating in the program are authorized 24 inactive duty training pay periods. A large percentage of reservists currently enrolled in the program, however, are on a non-pay basis.

Fields of Training in which courses are being offered are listed below. Others will be added as the program develops.

Air Reserve Districts

One of the principal features of the Air Force Long Range Program provides for the creation of Air Reserve Districts to better serve and more efficiently train reservists on a more personal basis than was heretofore possible.

It is planned ultimately to have Air Reserve Districts, serving every state, thereby making it easier and more convenient for you to contact a Reserve headquarters near your home.

Air Reserve Districts will maintain field files, administer records and perform many personal services important to the reservist. In other words, the Air Reserve District will be the reservists' clinic where you can have your personal reserve problems diagnosed and solved by experts on reserve affairs. You should feel free to consult with the personnel of your Air Reserve District on any reserve problem at any time.

Air Reserve Districts now in operation (as indicated on map on pp. 3 and 4 of this booklet) are located as follows:

First Air Reserve District,
100 North Cameron St.
Harrisburg, Pa.

Second Air Reserve District,
Goodman Bldg., 30 West Washington St.,
Indianapolis, Ind.

Third Air Reserve District,
1416 Lavaca St.,
Austin, Tex.

Fourth Air Reserve District,
870 Market St.,
San Francisco, Calif.

After 1 Nov 1952 additional Air Reserve District areas and headquarters are expected to be located as follows:

Fifth Air Reserve District at Boston, Mass., serving the New England States; Sixth at Portland, Oreg., for Washington, Oregon, and Montana; Seventh at Minneapolis for Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and Minnesota; and the Eighth at Shreveport, La., serving Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Louisiana.

Benefits May Be Earned By Air Reservists

Pay for Inactive Duty Training

If you are assigned to an Air Reserve unit which is in a pay status, you will receive 1 day's pay for each training period. For unit training of 8 hours or more duration during a calendar day two training periods may be authorized. Pay is computed by grade and length of service. Below are two pay tables, one for officers and the other for airmen. To determine how much money you would receive for each training period, look at the appropriate table for your present grade and read across to the number of years Federal military service (including time in the Reserve Forces) you have already accrued.

How To Compute Your Air Reserve Retirement Benefits

The amount of your Air Reserve retirement benefits will depend entirely upon you. The more you put into the Air Reserve, the more you will receive in the long run. This is a dollars-and-cents proposition that you must consider now to be in on the paying end later in life.

Upon reaching the age of 60 years and having completed a minimum of 20 years' satisfactory service in the Air Force Reserve you will be paid a monthly retirement for the rest of your life. The value of your retirement will be determined by the grade or rank attained, the percentage of base pay earned, and the length of active Federal and/or Air Reserve service.

The percentage of your retirement pay is dependent upon the number of points you earn. You must accrue a minimum of 50 points each year to have it counted as satisfactory. As an active Air Reservist you will automatically receive 15 points annually. You must then earn at least 35 additional points during each year to make it count toward retirement.

You may earn points in the following manner:

1 point for each day on active duty (not to exceed 365 points).
1 point for each authorized training period.
1 point for each presentation as an instructor.
1 point for 3 hours' study of USAF extension courses.
1 point for 2 hours of administrative duties.
1 point for 4 hours of flying duty performed at a time other than a scheduled drill period.

To compute your retirement income use the following formula:

1. Add the total number of points earned (both active duty and Reserve service).
2. Divide by 360 to determine the number of credited active duty years to which you are entitled.
3. Multiply by 2½ percent to arrive at the percentage of base pay to be paid upon retirement. Retirement income may not exceed 75 percent of base pay.

If you were a reservist at any time prior to 1 July 1949, you will automatically be credited with satisfactory service, with 50 points annually, for the time served, provided you had service in World War I or II.

Retirement Plan

Your service in the Air Reserve can be converted into cash income when you reach the age of 60 and have completed a minimum of 20 years' satisfactory active and/or Reserve service, the last 8 years of which must be service as a member of a Reserve component. This table will show you at a glance the percentage you may earn for each year of satisfactory service. Compute your active service at 2½ percent for each year, add your Reserve duty points as shown on the table. The total will give the percentage of retirement income you have earned.

Your Monthly Retirement Pay as A Typical Retiring USAF Reservist

This table projects retirement on the basis of active and Reserve service and shows the amount actually paid. Grades lower than captain and airman first class have not been computed because it is most likely that you will have been promoted to those grades or higher upon completion of service at retirement age.

Insurance and Benefits

Any member of the Reserve on active duty, active-duty training, or inactive-duty training is entitled to receive compensation, including benefits such as hospitalization and medical costs at Government expense, in case of injury incurred while receiving such training.

Reservists are also entitled to the benefits of the Federal Employee's Compensation Act. Briefly, if death results to a reservist during a training period or while on active military service, not in time of war, the widow, if no child is living, receives 45 percent of total pay and allowances, including flight pay, until her death or remarriage.

If a child exists, she receives 40 percent plus 15 percent for each child, not to exceed 75 percent of total pay and allowances if more than one child is living.

Complete and detailed explanation of the extensive benefits applicable to reservists may be obtained at your nearest Air Reserve office.

$250	40,000	2,240	198.80
$300	48,000	2,688	238.56

The above figures are based on a policy on which payments would be made for 20 years and which would pay the amounts indicated for life beginning at age 60. The monthly income may be more or less than that indicated in the table depending upon interest rates, amount of dividends, age of insuree at time insurance was written, etc.

You can see that even if you retire at one of the middle grades, your benefits will represent a sizeable investment. However, many of you by virtue of your ability, force of character, and interest in the Air Force Reserve, are going to reach the upper brackets. So, we have included the higher income figures too.

What You Would Have To Put Into the Bank* To Get a Like Monthly Income

Desired monthly income	Savings required	Desired monthly income	Savings required

Promotion for the Air Reservist

Each unit of the Air Force Reserve has a definite number of authorized officer and airmen grades. Promotions may be made when vacancies exist and the individual is qualified by proficiency, number of points earned and time in present grade.

Naturally, the individual who attends the most unit assemblies, participates in the most training periods, qualifies himself through Air Force extension school courses, and makes the most effort, will be among the first to be considered.

If you are in a pay status Air Reserve unit, promotion is important because you will receive definite cash benefits. If you are in a non-pay unit, you still will receive benefits of the higher grade upon retirement.

The Air Reservist Magazine

As a member of the Air Force Reserve you will get a monthly magazine not only written for you and published in your interests, but named for you as well! The Air Reservist, formerly the Air Reserve Forces Review, is a magazine published for Reserve officers and airmen by the Reserve Information Office of Headquarters, Continental Air Command. It also circulates to members of the Air National Guard, the AF ROTC, the Civil Air Patrol, and the Air Explorers.

This monthly publication is designed to give you up to date official information on Air Force activities and policies with special emphasis on how these things concern YOU as a reservist.

This is your publication, published in your interest, and for your information. Watch it closely for the latest important facts about you and your friends in the reserve program.

The Air Reservist provides information on training methods, changes in Air Force organizations and missions, new and amended instruction programs, and resident or nonresident courses of instruction available to the readers. It presents information and guidance on personnel matters such as retirement, orders to active duty, and delay therefrom, promotion, and classification and, in general, covers news of interest to the reservist.

The information in "You and the Air Reserve" has been carefully checked for accuracy up to the date of publication. Watch your Air Reservist carefully for additions or changes which may be important to you.

All members of the Air Force Reserve not on active military service are entitled to receive The Air Reservist at their homes without charge each month. If you do not receive it, send your name, rank, service number, and mailing address to The Air Reservist, Mitchel Air Force Base, New York. Whenever you change your address, send this mailing unit both your old address and your new one.

Women in the Air Force Reserve

Officers and airmen of the WAF have demonstrated their ability to perform assigned duties as members of the new Air Force. All career fields are open to them except combat and flying and those where they are physically disqualified.

There is a need for Women in the Air Force Reserve and their chances for advancement, education, pay, and retirement are on a par with those of male officers and airmen.

The Inventory of Air Force Reserve Personnel Resources

As one of the first steps in the Long-Range Air Force Reserve Program, personnel records of all Air Force Reservists not currently on active duty will be brought up to date during the fiscal year 1953.

This inventory of personnel resources will be carried out by 25 specially selected Air Force teams that will fan out across the Nation traveling from town to town to personally interview each reservist.

In certain sections of the country, it may not be practical to interview each reservist personally. In such instances, the survey will be accomplished through the mails.

You will have a chance in a personal interview to get the records straight not only on your current address, but to include your present family responsibilities and changes in your occupation. This is of real benefit to you and we will need your cooperation.

Essentially the information required from each reservist consists of (1) present civilian occupation, (2) dependents, (3) physical condition, and (4) postwar education and/or civilian experience.

When the survey is finished, records will be up to date and your present civilian skills, education, family status, and physical condition can be considered in assigning you to the position that fits you best in the Air Force Reserve.

Remember that the inventory has no connection with calling you to active military service.

Privileges Available to Reservists

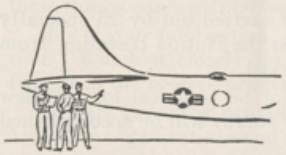
Clubs

At most Air Force Bases and installations reservists may become associate members of the Officer's Open Mess (formerly called Clubs), the NCO's Open Mess and the Airmen's Open Mess.

Recreation and Cultural Facilities

Air Force bases have many recreational facilities. Each base will supply information to its reservists on the use of these facilities on days when the units are in training. Among such facilities are swimming pools, tennis courts, gymnasiums, libraries, theaters, and hobby shops.

Air Travel



As a member of any organized Air Force Reserve unit, you are privileged to ride on military aircraft in the continental limits of the United States. Of course, this depends on space being available after all priorities have been satisfied. You must wear your uniform and present Reserve unit credentials. No such trips may be made for commercial purposes.

Marksmanship

Bases with rifle and pistol ranges often open their facilities to reservists, and also provide optional instruction in small arms firing.

Privileges During Short Tours of Active Duty

During the reservist's annual 15-day tour of active duty he enjoys the full privileges of the base personnel in the use of available facilities and in participation in special events. These privileges include group attendance at major entertainment events when scheduled, and participation in recreational activities organized and arranged by personnel stationed on the base.

Religious Services

Catholic, Protestant, and Jewish religious services are normally held in base chapels at convenient times, and may be attended by reservists during training weekends.

Sports

At many bases the organized Reserve units have their own teams in the major sports, which compete among themselves and play base personnel teams in the Air Force sports program.

Identification Card

You will be proud to carry the United States Air Force Reserve identification card. Set in plastic, it carries your picture, fingerprints, and signature. You will find that it will be extremely convenient whenever you wish to prove your identity or the authenticity of your signature.

Answers to Questions Frequently Asked by Reservists

1. If a reservist volunteers, is he assured of active military service?

   In the case of Reserve airmen; yes, provided all qualifications are met. In the case of Reserve officers; no. In either case, a reservist should not make final personal arrangements, such as selling home, etc., until processing has been completed and he receives his active-duty orders.

2. Are reservists ordered to active duty and placed in a pool to be used as needed?

   No. They are only ordered to duty to fill a vacancy for a specific Air Force Specialty, station, and unit of assignment.

3. In what grade will a reservist be ordered to extended active duty?

   A reservist will be ordered to extended active duty in his permanent Reserve grade.

4. How much time is given to settle personal affairs when a reservist is ordered to active duty?

   Reservists will normally receive 30 days notification from date of receipt of active duty orders indicating initial station assignment.

5. When does pay start and what travel time is authorized?

   Pay starts the day of departure from home. Authorized travel time will not exceed normal common carrier time. A reservist travels at his own risk if he commences his travel before the effective date shown in his orders.

6. What is the pay of reservists on active duty?

   Pay of reservists on active duty is the same as pay for Regular Air Force personnel of the same grade, longevity, and status.

7. Do opportunities for promotion exist for reservists on active duty?

   Yes. At present, a reservist on active duty is eligible for temporary promotion. The reservist is in competition with other reservists on active duty and Regular Air Force personnel.

8. May a reservist not on active military service deduct the cost of his uniforms from his income tax when he has not received a uniform allowance?

   Cost of rank insignia and other special decorations to the uniform is deductible. However, the Bureau of Internal Revenue has taken the position that the uniform itself is a substitute for other clothing and is therefore not deductible.

9. How may a Reserve officer make application for the Air Force Reserve identification card? (DD Form 2AF–Res.)

   By securing an AF Form 279 from any Air Force installation or from the Air Force headquarters having jurisdiction over his area. This form should be completed and forwarded to his unit of Reserve assignment. (AF Regulation 30–10)

10. Is there an Air Force Reserve identification card for airmen?

    Yes. DD Form 2AF (Res.) is now issued to airmen (AFR 30–10)—application is as outlined in question 10.

11. What happens when a Reserve officer becomes a casualty while on active military service or while performing a short tour of active duty for training?

    Reserve officers, who are ordered into active military service or to perform active duty for training for any period of time, who suffer disability or death in line of duty, shall be deemed to have been in the active military service and be entitled to receive the same benefits, compensation, death gratuity, retirement pay, hospital benefits, and pay and allowances as provided for by law for officers and enlisted men of corresponding grades in the Regular Air Force. This policy also applies to benefits for dependents of Reservists who are injured or suffer death while on active military service or while performing a short tour of active duty for training. (PL 108, AFR 45–21, AFR 173–4)

12. May a reservist get his primary Air Force Specialty changed?

Yes. Qualification for award of AFS's may be acquired through any of the following:

(1) Inactive or active duty training.
(2) Completion of a formal military course of instruction.
(3) Civilian experience.
(4) Civilian education.

13. May a reservist who is drawing pension, disability allowance, or disability compensation draw inactive- and active-duty training pay?

Yes; providing he waives such pension, disability allowance, or disability compensation for the number of days of each month for which he receives inactive- and/or active-duty training pay. (AFR 45–10)

14. Can an Air Force Reserve officer, who was eligible for terminal-leave promotion at time of discharge, but who did not receive such promotion, be promoted on this basis?

No. Regulations providing for terminal-leave promotion, of those officers who did not receive a terminal-leave promotion, were rescinded by headquarters United States Air Force on 15 August 1950.

15. How are training credit points recorded and by whom?

AFR 35–71 governs this action. This regulation directs active and inactive duty training credits to be recorded on a form known as the AF Form 190. It is the responsibility of the unit maintaining a reservist's Field Personnel Record to initiate and maintain this card and to send periodic statements of points earned to each reservist. These are known as point anniversary statements.

16. What law authorized Reserve personnel to retire?

Title III, Public Law 810, Eightieth Congress authorized a reservist who attains the age of 60 and has completed a total of 20 or more years of satisfactory Federal service in the armed forces of the United States to retire and be granted retired pay.

17. What constitutes a year of satisfactory Federal service?

a. Prior to July 1949, any 365 days, not necessarily consecutive service, served on active duty and/or as a member of a Reserve component of the armed service.

b. After 1 July 1949, any year in which a reservist is awarded a minimum of 50 points.

18. How can a Reserve officer resign his commission?

A Reserve officer may tender an unqualified resignation at any time. Acceptance will depend upon the anticipated requirements of the Air Force at the time of submission. Resignation will be submitted to the organization maintaining field personnel records.

19. Can the old World War II Army-type olive drab be worn in lieu of the new blue uniform?

Officers must wear the new blue uniform. Airmen may continue to wear the old uniform until a cut-off date is announced.

20. Who is eligible for the uniform allowance provided by the 1952 Armed Forces Reserve Act?

Effective 1 Jan 1953 a Reserve officer who has not received an initial uniform allowance under any other provision of law will be entitled to a $200 initial uniform allowance under the following circumstances:

(1) Upon first reporting for active duty for a period in excess of 90 days.

(2) Upon completion, as a member of a reserve component, of not less than 14 days active duty or active duty for training.

(3) After the performance of 14 periods of inactive duty training, of not less than 2 hours duration each, as a member of the Ready Reserve.

The Act further provides for a $50 uniform maintenance allowance every 4 years for reservists meeting certain standards and also authorizes certain categories of reservists entering on active duty for more than 90 days after 25 June 50 a $100 additional uniform allowance. All uniform allowances in the Act are effective on or after 1 Jan 53.

Continental Air Command has the over-all responsibility for the supervision of the Air Reserve Program. Its headquarters is at Mitchel Air Force Base, N. Y.

ConAC performs its mission through the numbered Air Forces listed below:

PORT ARTHUR, TEXAS 59

1. Under the provisions of AFR 35-71, a review of your records indicates that during the fiscal or anniversary year ending 30 June 1955, you have been credited with the following points and Federal Service:

Active Duty	0
Inactive Duty	36
Correspondence Course	0
Gratuitous Points (For Reserve Membership)	15
TOTAL	51

Year of Satisfactory Federal Service: YES XX NO ___.

2. Each member of the Air Force Reserve must accrue a minimum of fifty (50) points each year, either anniversary or fiscal as appropriate, in order for that year to be counted as a year of satisfactory Federal Service for retirement.

3. In the event you have not been credited with all points earned during this period, you should advise your squadron immediately, requesting a recheck of your records.

AVAILABILITY CLASSIFICATION QUESTIONNAIRE

INSTRUCTIONS

1. You are asked to complete those portions of this questionnaire form which are pertinent to you so that the Air Force may have a better basis for the evaluation of your ability to respond to active-duty orders if they should be sent to you during the present national emergency. While all members of the USAFR have the basic obligation to be available for active duty in time of emergency, the Air Force desires to issue orders to active military service, insofar as military requirements permit, with a minimum of disturbance to essential civilian economy and with a minimum of hardship to individual members of the reserve who merit special consideration because of exceptional circumstances.
2. After you have completed this form you will be given an availability classification based upon an evaluation of your case in the light of anticipated military requirements. Full explanation of circumstances which would cause you to seek delay in excess of 30 days must be made in Section V. Otherwise, availability 30 days after receipt of orders will be assumed. You will understand that it is necessary to consider all availability classifications as tentative, in the sense that they are subject to revision in the light of overriding military considerations.
3. Another purpose of this survey is to develop a closer relationship between point earning and pay status, on the one hand, and availability for military service in a time of war or national emergency, on the other. Transfer actions to nonpay or nonpoint status may be anticipated in situations where there is substantial conflict between personal or civilian requirements and availability for military service.
4. The original and duplicate of this Availability Classification Questionnaire are to be returned to your reserve organization. An extra copy is inclosed for you to keep. The Air Force directive which established this survey is AFR 35-84.
